THE LAW COMMISSION
WORKING PAPERS

Reprint of the Law Commission Working Papers

The early Law Commission Working Papers were reproduced on an office duplicator and have been in short supply for a long time. They were conceived of primarily as consultative documents, and it was thought that they would circulate mainly among those likely to offer comment and criticism.

Originals of some of these early papers have long since disappeared and the publisher has had to reprint at times from photocopies. This explains the poorer, but nevertheless acceptable, reproduction of a few papers.

That there was a great demand for Working Papers outside their original role of consultative documents soon became apparent. The method of reproduction was improved and the size reduced, and eventually, from No. 48, the Working Papers were offered to a wider market by their being published by HMSO and put on sale at Government Bookshops.

The current reprint embraces all the Working Papers up to No. 64 in seven volumes of uniform size.
